Primary Examiner—Robert A. Weinhardt

[57] ABSTRACT

A system to automatically provide to a consumer an electronic rebate by an existing telephone network and system. The consumer dials a dedicated preassigned telephone number and is prompted to enter the product code and a serial number for purchase verification purposes. A rebate is provided instantaneously in the form of a credit to the consumer's telephone account. The rebates so provided to consumers are collected on a per manufacturer basis, and the telephone service provider bills statements to the rebating manufacturers to cover the rebates issued as well as its service charge.

14 Claims, 3 Drawing Sheets

DOCUMENT-IDENTIFIER: US 5729693 A
TITLE: System and method to automatically provide an electronic consumer rebate

BSPR:
In accordance with these and other objects, provided is an automated rebate system which can be implemented on an existing public telephone network which is readily available to virtually all consumers. After purchasing the applicable product, the purchaser accesses the rebate system by dialing from his home telephone a phone number provided on or inside the packaging of the purchased product. Upon being connected with the system, the purchaser is instructed by an automatic voice prompt to enter via a touch-tone (DTMF) telephone keypad a product code, which may be the Universal Product Code (UPC) and/or some other code provided by the manufacturer. The system can use the product code to verify that the rebate offer for that product has not expired. The rebate amount is then retrieved from a look-up table by using the product code as an address pointer. The consumer is then instructed to enter the product serial number for verification purposes. The serial number on higher-end goods is normally provided by the manufacturer on the goods themselves (e.g. on the back of a television set), while a serial number for lower-end goods may be printed inside the packaging by the manufacturer (e.g. for a bar of soap). After verification by the system that the serial number provided by the purchaser has not been previously rebated, the rebate amount is then used to provide immediately a credit to the purchaser's telephone account, which credit will appear on the purchaser's next statement. The telephone service provider accumulates, on a periodic basis, the total amount of rebates it provided for each manufacturer it services, and bills each manufacturer for the total rebated amounts as well as a service charge, which may be incremental (per rebate) or a flat fee.
